

Feng Shui Mandalas

Feng Shui means “wind and water” and is the ancient art aligning objects with the forces of nature to enhance our lives. Energy or “qi” (pronounced “chi”) is all around us and can be harnessed to improve the quality of our everyday lives.

The energy in our homes can enhance or impede our: prosperity; fame and reputation; romance and relationships; family; health; creativity and children; wisdom (skills and knowledge); career; and helpful people and travel.

Prosperity Mandala

In feng shui, the home is divided into 9 zones called the bagua. Each section or “gua” influences a different aspect of our lives. For example, if you wanted to attract new love into your life, you would concentrate on the back right section of your home which effects relationships and love. You attract good energy, first by clearing a space and removing negative influences, and then by intentionally placing items in the space that represents the outcome you want to achieve.

Mandala comes from a Sanskrit word meaning "circle" or "completion".

In modern times, it could be a plan, chart, or geometric pattern that represents the cosmos. Mandalas are also used as spiritual teaching tools, to establish a sacred space, or as an aid to meditation.

Feng Shui Mandalas - Prosperity

Feng Shui Mandalas were created to be used to enhance the positive energy in a space.

This Feng Shui Mandala promotes Prosperity. To create this mandala, the artist took photos of objects representing prosperity, arranged the images into a collage, and then transformed the collage into the special mandala pictured above. The actual mandala has been imbued with positive energy to attract prosperity.

To attract prosperity into your life, place this mandala in the back left section of your home or room. Prosperity Mandalas make great gifts for recent graduates, newlyweds, or anyone about to embark on a new venture.
